HISTORY

Named for Anne Focke, an alum who exemplifies the traits in the award description, it is a non-cash honor organized by the School's Advisory Board and other community leaders. The Anne Focke Arts Leadership Award was originally hosted by 911 Media Arts. The awardees were Anne Focke, Richard Andrews, Helen Gurvich, and Ed Marquand. 2017 was the first year the award was offered by the School, signifying our commitment to preparing students for both professional and leadership roles. Beth Sellars was the recipient.

Anne Focke received her Art History bachelor's degree from the School in 1967, making her one of the earliest graduates of this program. She was also our Alum in Residence during 2016–2017. Focke was the first staff person for the City of Seattle's arts agency, first director of its public art program, and director of Bumbershoot (the city's annual arts festival) the year it got its name. Focke freelances in the arts, philanthropy, and civil society. She has worked as an editor, writer, and researcher; a consultant and planner; nonprofit executive; organizer and start-up activist; public arts agency staffer; curator; and artist. Focke served for ten years as the first executive director of Grantmakers in the Arts and for eighteen years as co-editor of its journal, GIA Reader. She has participated in founding new enterprises including Arts Wire, an early national online network; Artist Trust, serving Washington State artists; and/or, an artist center; and Artech, a for-profit art-handling company.
